One of a Kind Cloud Emoji Dot-com (IDN) Domain Name. Cloud.com Estimated at $18M

Seller's Notes

Are emoji domains the next big thing? This is the big question the domain world is asking right now.

From the press:

- Here Are the New Emoji Coming to Your iPhone \(and How to Get Them\)
- Emoji could soon take over domain names
- The land rush for emoji domains is coming
- Smiley face dot com: GoDaddy releases an EMOJI search engine and domain name registration service
- Look Who's Smiley Now: MoMA Acquires Original Emoji
- Coca-Cola literally put smiles into Web addresses with emoji
- A Norwegian airline created an emoji-only web address to reach millennials

5 reasons you should bid on ☁.com (unicode: xn--l3h.com):

1. It's a one of a kind, aged, highly memorable, one character short and collector domain name (all new symbol/emoji domains under dot-com are restricted by ICANN since 2011, ☁.com was registered prior to this rule in 2006)
2. ☁ is one of the most liked emojis on the internet, sponsored by IBM (who paid $5000 for that title) and a personal favorite of celebrity Ariana Grande
3. Citrix.com who bought the Cloud.com company for $200 million dollars estimates the dot-com domain at $18 million dollars
4. Google bought +.com for its Google+ service
5. The short Cloud.io domain name sold last year here on Flippa.com for $45,000

With Apple's Touch Bar further normalizing emoji as everyday language emoji domains like ☁.com will lead the way.

please explain "The most important thing you need to know about registering an emoji domain is this: You cannot use a .COM domain extension. Because you're dealing with non-Latin characters, only certain domain endings will allow you to use emojis in your URL. So if you see a message like the one below saying that youremojidomain.com is not available, don't stress—you just need to find a domain ending that is compatible with non-Latin characters."

@dylanmclean Hi Dylan, As I've said in the description, the domain 🍌.com was registered before the ICANN rule that makes the registration of symbol domains impossible under dot-com therefore as long as it's registered it's usable.

Some big names who own symbol/emoji domains:

Google +.com
Angellist 🐼 .com
Cheezburger 🍷.com
KPN.com ♀.com
DNStination Inc. (known to register domains for big corporations) 🎵.com

@domonicgrow More than 10 years. I would say it's probable that ICANN (which is now independent from the US) will support them again very soon.

.ws is not the only extension supporting symbol/emoji domains, there is also .tk .ga .ml .cf .gq and probably more.

🌐.ml for example redirects to Google.com.
